Food and Heart Health Myths

Myth: Saturated fat is healthy now....

Meat, chicken, dairy products and palm and coconut oil are all sources of saturated fats. It is also in processed foods like biscuits, pastries and take away foods.

Saturated fats are healthier than unsaturated fats, but preferable to trans-fats. Evidence shows that removing saturated fats and including unsaturated fats will reduce your heart disease risk. (Swapping out saturated fat with wholegrains also reduces your heart disease risk, but not to the same extent as unsaturated fats) Replacing saturated fats with refined carbohydrates does NOT reduce your heart disease risk.

Can saturated fats be a part of a heart healthy diet?

No. Junk food and drinks are the leading contributors to saturated fat intake. Cut these out by replacing them with heart healthy choices; nuts, seeds, avocados, olives.
