Headlice

Head lice are tiny, wingless, parasitic insects about the size of a sesame seed that live and feed on blood from the scalp.

Lice are not dangerous and do not spread disease, however their bites can cause itching and sometimes skin irritation.

Head lice lay eggs which hatch after 7-10 days. It takes about ten days for a newly hatched louse to grow to an adult and start to lay eggs. Eggs look like tiny white dots attached firmly to the hair. They cannot be brushed or flicked off but need to be physically removed.
