Hayfever

Hay fever is the common name for a condition called allergic rhinitis, which means an allergy that affects the nose. Hay fever is caused by the nose and/or eyes coming into contact with environmental allergens, such as pollens, dust mites, moulds and animal hair. Most people associate hay fever with spring, when airborne grass pollens are at their peak. This is known as seasonal allergic rhinitis or spring hay fever.

PROFESSIONAL NATURAL MEDICINES

Ethical Nutrients CLINICAL

Fem Force

Tiredness and fatigue can occur when dietary intake of energy-producing nutrients is inadequate. Energy production is a complex process involving many pathways and key nutrients, such as iron, vitamin B12 and iodine. Plant-based diets are becoming more common for ethical and sustainability reasons. Unfortunately, they are often low in iron, vitamin B12 and iodine, and red meat is a major source of Coenzyme Q10. While the body can synthesise CoQ10, the ability to do so declines with age.

This product is vegan & vegetarian friendly.
